[TOOT, TOOT]

Popeye The Sailor. “Fright to the Finish.” Copyright 1954.

Nighttime. A carved pumpkin on a fence post; light flickers inside it. Tree branches reach out like grasping fingers. In the front room of a home under a full moon, thin Olive Oyl reads from a book: Halloween Ghost Stories; she sits between large, bearded Bluto and short, bald Popeye, both frowning. Thought bubbles: Popeye—Ain’t Bluto got no home ta go to? Bluto—How can I get rid of that runt Popeye?

Popeye turns to her.

00:01:10

... of the imagininations.

Bluto, finger to his chin, grins slyly, stands and yawns.

00:01:18

... my bedtime.

Popeye jumps up, pushing Bluto to the door.

00:01:21

... ya have to go, chum.

He plops a cap on Bluto’s head— [PLOP]

Opens the door— [CLICK] [G’night, Bluto.] –and pushes Bluto out.
